Why Shred?

Shredding confidential information to protect personal information makes sense, especially when you consider the increasing financial cost of a security breach, not to mention the significant reputation damage that follows. Statistics show it can take as long as a year to recover from a security breach!

Want a few more good reasons to shred confidential information?

- Minimize the risk of a security breach – 43% of security breaches are caused by physical means like dumpster diving. If information is shredded on site, there's nothing in the trash for data thieves and it reduces your risk of a breach.
- Prevent identity theft – One in 10 people are already victims of the fastest growing form of fraud world wide. Shredding information at the source minimizes the risk of confidential information getting into the wrong hands.
- Enhance privacy protection – 41% of privacy breaches are caused by simple human error. By implementing a shred-all policy, you can eliminate document management confusion.
- Reduce environmental impact – Each person generates 6.4 lbs. of a garbage every day so it's not surprising individual's are looking at more sustainable practices that won't compromise privacy protection. Recycling paper after it has been securely shredded is one way to reduce a individual's environmental footprint.
